'Dream echoes still'

Obamas, Chicagoans heed call for community service

Associated Press

WASHINGTON At the dawn of a new era in race and politics, President-elect Obama practiced the age-old virtue of service on Monday and summoned memories of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. "Everyone's got to be involved," said the man in line to become the first black chief executive.

"Tomorrow we will come together as one people on the same Mall where Dr. King's dream echoes still," said Obama, who takes the oath of office at 11 a.m. Tuesday.

Obama issued a statement declaring, "King's was a life lived in loving service to others. As we honor that legacy, it's not a day just to pause and reflect—it's a day to act."

The president-elect's motorcade headed for the Sasha Bruce House, a facility for homeless teens, where he grabbed a paint roller and helped volunteers who were fixing up rooms.

"We can't allow any idle hands," he said. "Everybody's got to be involved."

Later, Obama joined his wife at a high school where they greeted 300 volunteers who were writing letters to U.S. troops and doing other volunteer work.

In Atlanta, at the church where King preached, Obama's impending inauguration resonated heavily.

But there is still work to be done, King's nephew told a large crowd Monday. Isaac Newton Farris told the jubilant crowd on what would have been King's 80th birthday, "There is definitely a spiritual connection between these two events."

Farris cautioned that as long as disparities persist in health care, education and economics, King's work remains undone.

"The dream was not about an individual or any race of people attaining power," Farris said. "It was a human dream."

Chicago hears Obama's call

Responding to President-elect Obama's "call to service" on Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Day, people across the Chicago area Monday were taking part in efforts to help others.

At the University of Chicago Medical Center, more than 200 colorful knit hats made by a national group called Knitters for Obama and hospital employees were handed out to cancer treatment patients. The 4,000-member group was started in support of Obama's presidential campaign, said Chicagoan Kristen Rengren, one of the group's founders.

"For a lot of people, this is their first time doing public service," Rengren said. "I think that's one of the great things about Obama—that he's inspired people to do service for the first time."

City Year, a non-profit group that enlists young people for a year of full-time community service, decided to lend a helping hand Monday to Sherwood Elementary School in Englewood.

Students who were out of school for the national holiday will likely be surprised when they return Tuesday to a building with freshly painted hallways and classrooms, and murals of the food pyramid in the lunchroom and children's book characters in the library.

City Year usually does service projects at locations around the city on the King holiday, said Johnny Barr, the group's director of external relations. But this year there appeared to be more volunteers than projects.

"We've had to turn people away, unfortunately," he said. "It's an amazing day to see people who want to come out and do service." TRIBUNE

Study: Women have the need to feed

Associated Press

Faced with their favorite foods, women are less able than men to suppress their hunger, a discovery that may help explain the higher obesity rate for females, a new study suggests.

Gene-Jack Wang of Brookhaven National Laboratory and colleagues were trying to figure out why some overeat and gain weight while others don't.

They performed brain scans on 13 women and 10 men, who had fasted overnight, to determine how their brains responded to the sight of their favorite foods. In the study, participants were quizzed about their favorite foods and then asked to fast overnight.

The next day they underwent brain scans while being presented with their favorite foods. In addition, they used a technique called cognitive inhibition, which they had been taught, to suppress thoughts of hunger and eating. While both men and women said the inhibition technique decreased their hunger, the brain scans showed that men's brain activity actually decreased, while the part of women's brains that responds to food remained active.

"Even though the women said they were less hungry when trying to inhibit their response to the food, their brains were still firing away in the regions that control the drive to eat," Wang said.

HERE'S A TIP

RedEye offers three surefire ways to suppress your appetite:

- » Look up that YouTube video of the fat guy dancing to "Single Ladies."
- » Head over to your local gym locker room and inhale three times.
- » Record Fox's "Hole In the Wall" and watch a marathon.

Getting to the bottom of CTA mysteries Why doesn't MTV just go ahead and take the "music" out of its name? Why is "Two and a Half Men" still on TV?

Answer to the above: No earthly clue. But when it comes to the CTA, the transit truth is definitely out there. Cue the spookysounding music. It's time for another batch of Mass Transit Mysteries. You know how we get down. Riders supply the questions and "Going Public" gets the answers.

PASS OR FAIL South Sider April Lawson recently called me about something fishy with fare card prices. Lawson, 40, wanted to purchase a 7-day pass from a Currency Exchange at 7349 S. Racine Ave. The location still stocked passes from last year, which cost $20, but the outlet was selling them for the 2009 rate of $23, Lawson said.

"It just didn't make sense that there was one price on the pass, but they were asking me to pay a higher amount," Lawson said. "Is that allowed?"

Not so much. "All currency exchanges and other outlets selling CTA fare media are directed to sell the fare media at face value," CTA spokeswoman Wanda Taylor told me. "The Currency Exchange acknowledged misunderstanding when the passes were to be increased and has indicated refunds will be given to customers who purchased 2008 passes for $23 and still have a receipt."

FLIGHT OF THE CLYBOURN There are CTA bus routes running all over this fair city. Why then is there no dedicated bus route for Clybourn Avenue, some riders have asked. Fact: There was a Clybourn bus route, but it was discontinued in 1997 due to low ridership, Taylor said.

But the route could be back in business. The CTA recently received approval for a pilot program to provide service along Clybourn, Taylor said, adding that a start date is not yet available.

FARE PLAY A Ravenswood rider hit "Going Public" with a question that came across like a grade-school word problem. (Bear with me if you hated math class.) Jason Patterson, 30, pays $2.25 when he takes the No. 11-Lincoln bus and boards the Brown Line at the Western stop to commute to work. On the way back, Patterson pays $2.50 when he takes the Brown Line to the No. 11.

Question: Why does Patterson pay a quarter more when he reverses his commute?

OK, pencils down. Patterson pays more because the bus costs less than the train. "The difference in the cost is due to the capital expense of maintaining a rail infrastructure—stations, tunnels, tracks, trains and rail yards," Taylor said. "Whereas for the buses, there are only the actual buses and garages to maintain."

Last year, Taylor noted, a customer using a transit card paid $1.75 on the bus and $2 on the train.

Bus ride allows locals to reflect

Chicago Tribune

Hours before the buses were scheduled to depart the west suburbs, the parking lot of Sanctuary Church in Hillside was chaotic.

Residents scrambled, saying goodbye to loved ones as they tried to find which bus to load.

Thousands of Chicagoans poured into the nation's capital to celebrate. Many of them rode in bus caravans that turned into pilgrimages lasting at least 12 hours.

"There are people from all walks of life," said Angel Lacruise, who organized a trip for 150 people who loaded onto three buses and left Sunday night. "People just want to be there to breathe the air."

More than 500 people signed up to ride on the 10 buses organized by Rep. Danny Davis' office, according to spokeswoman Tumia Romero. For some, the journey was just as important as the destination.

Robert Peters, 23, didn't learn he got a ticket to go on the trip from his parents until a couple of days before the buses departed. He traveled by train for 12 hours on Saturday night from Topeka, Kan., to get on the bus.

"I feel connected to Obama," said the education student, who is mixed race and was raised in Hyde Park by white parents who adopted him. "My first-ever vote was for him during the primary."

In her quiet time, Chicago police officer Vivian Freeman thought about growing up in Mississippi, where blacks and whites rarely engaged. Never did the she think she'd travel to see a black man sworn in as president. "A lot of people are not willing to accept this change," she said. "But this event, it makes me feel, it gives me hope."

Thousands of people line up in the cold Monday to pick up their inauguration ceremony tickets in Washington. GETTY IMAGES

Waiting for Obama

From news services

It probably will be the most widely watched address ever delivered, one that will draw millions of Americans and billions around the globe together—to savor the moment and the message of one man at one memorable turning point in American history.

And that makes the inaugural address of Barack Obama, to be delivered Tuesday, more than merely a ceremonial occasion of state. It represents the biggest challenge yet for a political leader whose eloquence has been essential in his unlikely rise to become leader of the free world.

The test: to not only master the present, but to meet the standards of those who have stood before him in the same place, to deliver a soaring sermon for the ages and at the same time to address the precise set of daunting circumstances now facing the nation.

In an interview aired Sunday on ABC's "This Week," David Axelrod, Obama's senior adviser, said the speech would be consistent with the themes that Obama has emphasized throughout the campaign.

"I don't think you're going to be surprised by what you hear," he said. "I think he's going to talk about where we are as a country but also who we are as a people and what responsibilities accrue to us as a result of that, and what we have to do to move forward."

What was evident in Washington on Monday was that throngs of ordinary Americans giddily awaited Obama's words. They transformed Washington's streets into a giant pre-party stretching from the overflowing inbound trains at Union Station to the banks of the iced-over Potomac.

Homeowners tacked bunting to their porches, high school cheerleaders composed special chants for the new president, and a boys' choir from Kenya wowed a street-corner crowd with an impromptu concert.

"This is going to be part of our family's history," said Ian Pearce of Brooklyn, who explored the Capitol grounds with his 8-year-old son and other family members. "It will be passed on from generation to generation."

The day was not without its annoyances—sure to multiply exponentially on Tuesday. Commuters unfamiliar with the local Metro system queued up in long lines to buy fare cards. Street closures spread virally. Parking garage rates spiked overnight to $25.

Baggage-toting throngs arriving at Union Station found it easier to find souvenirs than taxis, prompting some travelers to head out on long slogs by foot to their hotels—if they were lucky enough to have a room. Those cabbies who could get through the congestion could only shake their heads.

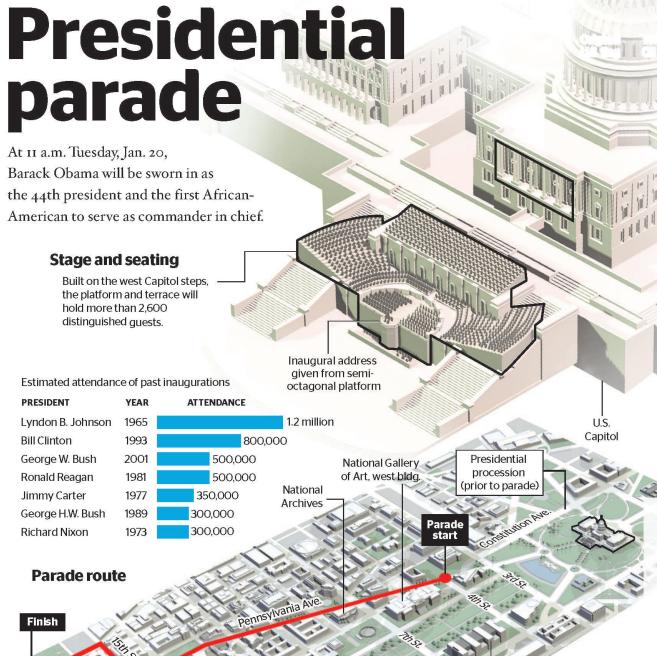

REDEYE | TUESDAY

"I have never seen such a mess," muttered one. "I'm staying home tomorrow."

As for Obama, well, he won't be staying in. On Monday night he was stopping by dinners saluting his vice president, Joe Biden, and two Republican stalwarts: former Secretary of State Colin Powell and Sen. John McCain of Arizona, the man Obama defeated last November to win the White House.

He began his day with a visit to Walter Reed Army Medical Center, where he visited 14 veterans injured in Iraq and Afghanistan. On Tuesday morning, he and his wife, Michelle, will meet President Bush and First Lady Laura Bush at the White House. By the time Obama returns at mid-afternoon, he will be the nation's 44th president. SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE, AP CONTRIBUTED.

Chase closing 57 WaMu branches

JPMorgan Chase plans to close 57 Washington Mutual branches in the Chicago area by March 24 as part of its recent acquisition of the failed thrift that has 117 branches here.

Chase, which along with Bank of America is one of the market's two biggest banks, has 327 Chicago-area branches, so it'll have 387 branches in the Chicago area after the consolidation with WaMu.

WaMu's systems will be converted to Chase systems this summer. At that point, more branches could close, a Chase spokesman said.

"There may be further consolidations after the conversions in the summer, but that's where we're at now," the spokesman said.

Only a "small number" of WaMu workers at the 57 branches are likely to lose their jobs; many will be shifted to Chase or WaMu branches that remain open.

Remaining WaMu branches eventually will be rebranded Chase.

Mom charged with child endangerment

A mother accused of throwing a car seat containing her infant daughter against a wall during a quarrel was charged with felony child endangerment and domestic battery, authorities said Monday.

Rosemary Smith also was charged with another count of child endangerment after an older child reported she had been hit by her mother with a hanger a few days earlier, authorities said.

Smith, 31, of the 1400 block of North Talman Avenue was held Monday in lieu of $100,000 bail.

Authorities said Smith and the father of her 4-month-old girl were arguing in their bedroom Friday when Smith picked up the child as she was seated in the car seat.

Smith flung the car seat against the wall and then began to shake the car seat, Asst. State's Atty. Mary Pat Devereux said in court.

The father as well Smith's former boyfriend, who also lives in the residence, wrested the child away from Smith, Devereux said. Smith then chased the father of the infant out of the home, throwing boots at him and breaking a window on his vehicle, she

The police were called, and the infant was taken to the hospital with minor injuries.

During the investigation, an 8-year-old daughter told authorities Smith struck her on the arm with a coat hanger several days earlier, Devereux said.

Doctors noted two bruises on her arm consistent with that kind of injury, she said.

Presidential OK BOK

Barack Obama has talked about fixing college football, but there are other sports to fix too

RedEye

Barack-excuse us, President Obama-it's time to get to work. After your election to the highest office in the world, you said in an interview on "60 Minutes" that college football needs a playoff to determine a No. 1 team. You're right.

But you've got other sports problems to solve. This is a short list of what needs fixin'.

THE PROBLEM: NFL games can end in a tie after 15 minutes of overtime have been played, contrary to what even players believed. Even worse, games can end with only one team getting a chance to take the

THE SOLUTION: College football has it right. Each team should have a chance to win the game. Give the winners of the coin toss the ball on, say, the 35 yard line and give them a chance to score or get a first down. If the first team scores, the other team gets a chance. Continue until a winner is declared.

JANUARY 20, 2009 I REDEYE

CASE #1: In November, the Philadelphia Eagles and Cincinnati Bengals played to the NFL's first tie in six years. After the game, several players, including Eagles QB Donovan McNabb, expressed their surprise that a game could end in a tie.

CASE #2: On Jan. 3, the Indianapolis Colts and San Diego Chargers playoff game went to OT, and the Chargers won the game on their first drive. The Colts' offense, led by one of the league's best quarterbacks, Peyton Manning, didn't even get to take the field in OT.

NBA, NHL PLAYOFFS

THE PROBLEM:

Thanks in large part to TV demands, the NHL and NBA playoffs seem more like a death march, dragging on and on, bleeding every last ounce of drama from them. CASE #1: The NHL, a winter sport, crowns its champ in June, almost two months after the playoffs begin April 15. CASE #2: The NBA playoffs begin just after the NHL playoffs and could go all the way until June 18. THE SOLUTION: Both leagues could get by with fewer teams qualifying for the postseason, possibly eliminating an entire round of playoffs. There's no reason teams with .500 records should play for a title. Sorry, Bulls fans.

BRETT FAVRE'S

THE PROBLEM: Every NFL off-season it seems quarterback Brett Favre considers retirement. He often takes weeks, if not months, to make his decision. This hurts teams trying to plan for life after Favre and fans trying to avoid the annual drama.

CASE #1: A couple weeks ago, Favre told ESPN he is going to follow the advice of Jets General Manager Mike Tannenbaum and will not think about football for a while. Favre told ESPN that if he does retire, he will make the announcement quietly, without a news conference, unlike last year.

CASE #2: Last off-season, Favre retired then un-retired from the Green Bay Packers, creating a distraction for the team in the weeks leading up to training camp.

SOLUTION: Maybe it's time to send in the IRS or Justice Department and scare Favre into a decision he can stick with—and soon.

MARCH MADNESS FOR ALL

THE PROBLEM:

There's so much good college basketball during the first couple weekends of the NCAA Tournament that one network cannot handle it all.

case #1: CBS and ESPN used to share coverage of the tournament's early rounds, giving fans more basketball than they get nowadays. CBS is the sole network covering the madness.

THE SOLUTION: Let other networks air games that CBS will otherwise not show nationally. Games featuring local teams should be shown on local networks, such as Northwestern (if they ever make the tourney) on WGN or CSN or WCIU, whatever.

Sports fans hope the fix is in

Uh-oh: Priest who blessed Wrigley mad at Cubs

As if the Cubs don't have enough curses and hexes to deal with, now Greek Orthodox priest Rev. James L. Greanias, brought in to Wrigley Field to remove a curse before Game 1 of last year's playoffs, has accused Cubs Chairman Crane Kenney of throwing him "under the bus" at last weekend's Cubs

When a fan asked about the ritual, Kenney took the blame, calling it "one of the dumbest things" he had done. Kenney said Greanias had initially approached him.

"An e-mail comes in, and this was a huge Cubs fan who wants to get tickets to the game and has a cell phone with a Cubs ringtone on it, and I said, 'Let him go,' "Kenney said.

Greanias took issue with that account.

The priest from Valparaiso, Ind., said he never asked for tickets and that the Cubs had called him out of the blue to ask him to remove the Billy Goat

"Kenney told me he wanted a Greek Orthodox priest because [William] Sianis was Greek," said Greanias, referring to the tavern owner who placed a hex on the Cubs during the 1945 World Series. "The last thing on my mind was calling the Cubs to ask them to bless the field. In fact, I thought it was a joke at first."

Lucky Blackhawks fan cashes in on Martin Havlat goal

Chicago's Martin Havlat scores a goal Monday, beating Minnesota Wild goaltender Niklas Backstrom in the second period at the United Center. NUCCIO DINUZZO/TRIBUNE

One lucky Blackhawks fan came to the United Center on Monday night hoping to see a victory by the home team. He left a millionaire.

Through a promotion by the Illinois Lottery, an unidentified man was awarded $1 million when the Hawks' Martin Havlat scored a goal at exactly the 10-minute mark of the second period.

Most of the 21,320 left the arena with frowns following the Hawks' 4-1 loss to the Minnesota Wild, but the new millionaire was all smiles and looked a little stunned when he met with Havlat outside the locker room after the game.

"At least something good came out of the game," Havlat told the winner.

The Hawks marketing department said the man requested his name be immediately withheld, and he will be introduced before Wednesday night's Niklas Backstrom made 40 saves, and defenseman Marek Zidlicky had two power-play goals and an assist to lead the Minnesota Wild to a 4-1 victory over the Blackhawks on Monday night. The Wild dealt the Blackhawks only their third regulation loss at home this season. The Blackhawks are 14-2-5 at the United Center and lost 6-4 to Detroit at Wrigley Field in the NHL Winter Classic. Martin Havlat scored for the Blackhawks game against the St. Louis Blues.

When told during the postgame news conference a fan had won $1 million on Havlat's goal, Hawks coach Joel Quenneville said, "He did? Good for him."

Eight dates to rescue your Valentine's Day budget

By Lisa Balde

Judging by the sudden frequency of the "diamonds are forever" guy on TV, Valentine's Day is well on its way. Whether that sends you into a flutter of fancy-reservation anticipation or a spiral of cash-flow panic, you don't have to break dates to save money for the big night out. Keep your spending in check with these money-saving escapades.

$20 and less

Self-professed beer nerds

The date: In case you need another reason to celebrate the renewed lifespan of Goose Island Brewpub (1800 N. Clybourn Ave. 312-915-0071), the menu is getting a revamp thanks menu is getting a revamp thanks to Old Oak Tap's John Manion. Take the Sunday brew tour ($5 per person, includes samples) and you just might get a chance to inquire about the menu's new beer pairings.

Next stop: The Libertine (1615 N. Clybourn Ave. 312-654-1782) for a shared slice of molten lava cake ($7).

Burger 'n' beer pals

The date: River West hoodies have known about the $10 Kobe burger and pint deal at Paramount Room (415 N. Milwaukee Ave. 312-829-6300) for some time now. Get in on the secret and order up a pair. Sneak in on Thursday and nibble appetizers from the free buffet, 4:30-6:30 p.m.

Next stop: Funky Buddha Lounge (728 W. Grand Ave. 312-666-1695) for Kitchen Sink Thursdays. E-mail rsvp@ funkybuddha.com for free admission into this weekly party.

$15 and less

Indie-rock scenesters

The date: For those who say that love is like a good soup, stop by Hideout (1354 W. Wabansia Ave. 773-227-4433) for the venue's new Wednesday soup night to benefit the Greater Chicago Food Depository. Shell out a $5-$7 cover for the jazz du jour and sip soup made by a rotating cast of chefs for free. 5-8 p.m.

Next stop: Relax Lounge (1450 W. Chicago Ave. 312-666-6006) for no-cover DJ tunes.

Dance flirts

The date: New Wicker Park bar Crocodile (1540 N. Milwaukee Ave. 773-252-0880) beckons your coupley charisma at its weekly XOXO Dance Party on Fridays. Hear tunes spun by an array of indie rockers, including Kid Color on Jan. 30. No cover. 10 p.m.

Next stop: Five Guys (2140 N. Clybourn Ave. 773-327-5953) for a couple of mini-burgers ($3-$4), fries ($1-$2) and free peanuts.

$10 and less

Eco-friendly couples

The date: Pre-empt a romantic dinner for two with a trip to Green City Market (Peggy Notebaert Nature Museum, 2430 N. Cannon Drive. 773-755-5100), now open year-round on the first and third Saturday of each month. Your next chance is Feb. 7, when the market kicks off its February thememeat and potatoes. 8 a.m.-1 p.m. No cover.

Next stop: Your place, of course, to taste the fruits—err, veggies—of your shopping spree.

Escalating artsy types

The date: Venture into Brideport's blossoming art scene via the Co-Prosperity Sphere (3219-21 S. Morgan St. 773-837-0145), a solid gallery upstart that proved its indie chops on New Year's Eve with performances by Icy Demons and Mahjongg. Check out the Sphere's latest art show, featuring works by the Young Polish Artists, through Feb. 17. No cover.

Next stop: New Bridgeport music venue, Go-Go Town (3117 S Morgan St. 773-301-4425). See Boston indie rockers Teaadora at 8 p.m. Jan. 28. $5 per ticket.

HER BULGE, HIS BOOK AND THEIR PLAN

New York Times News Service

It has been more than 10 years, but Oprah Winfrey is still chafing over the time her fitness guru denied her a single glass of celebratory champagne.

"It was the Emmys," Winfrey recalled last week in a Webcast, her voice rising with traces of resentment. "I had just gotten the lifetime achievement award. Yeah, yeah!"

"You had just signed a contract with me, no alcohol," retorted her trainer, Bob Greene, who has overseen her diet and exercise regimen since 1992. "And you had said, 'Can't I get out of it?'"

On the surface, Greene was making a point about honoring commitments to yourself. But given recent headlines—and the apparent tension between the two—it was hard not to hear a deeper message: This is not my fault.

Those headlines involve Winfrey's recent weight gain. She kicked off 2009 by disclosing the fact that she once again had hit 200 pounds.

"I can't believe I'm still talking about weight," Winfrey told her talk show audience on Jan. 5.

She is not the only one reeling. Just as Winfrey was making her announcement, Greene's new book, "The Best Life Diet Cookbook," and the second edition of his earlier "The Best Life Diet," were hitting shelves.

Greene is now trying to promote his diet books as the whole world marvels over how much weight his star client has gained. But like the loyal Oprah disciple he is, Greene is not complaining.

"It doesn't bother me in the least," he said in a telephone interview from his Chicago hotel room just hours before the Webcast.

"Everyone knows she follows my plan, but when she doesn't, she gains weight, and when she does, it's the only thing that works for her," said Greene, who has staked a good chunk of his professional reputation on his star client's waistline.

The more Winfrey's weight becomes a topic of conversation—good or bad—the more attention the news media pay to Greene.

This phenomenon is not lost on him.

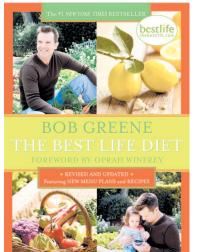

"It's a very positive thing for me," he said, "and book sales aren't suffering."

For one thing, Winfrey's struggle with yo-yo dieting seems to endear her to her fans, who tend to empathize with her plight. For another, controversy seldom hurts an author's sales. Winfrey has so far accepted the blame for her lapse, never suggesting the fault lies with Greene or his plan. Not everyone is so generous.

Gunnar Peterson, a personal trainer who has worked with Jennifer Lopez, Penelope Cruz and Mike Tyson, said any time a client falls off the wagon, the fault lies with the trainer, because it is his or her job to formulate a plan that works for the client. "Great plan, Bob," Peterson said. "In theory it's a 10, but guess what: It's not working."

GREENE'S GREEN

Bob Greene's fitness empire includes not just diet books and fitness videos but endorsement deals with a raft of food brands, from Lean Cuisine and Slim-Fast to Hellmann's and Hershey's. He has made so much money from his "Best Life" franchise and his "Best Life Seal of Approval" that he no longer even charges Oprah Winfrey for his services. He says that his association with her is worth more than any fee.

Winfrey circa 1988

Recycling electronics

Getting rid of outdated high-tech gear isn't as simple as putting it out for the trash pickup. Old TVs, monitors and computers are loaded with Earth-unfriendly metals and chemicals. In many cases, trash pickup firms refuse to take such items. So what to do? Let's run down some easy and sane ways to take out the trash. ATLANTA JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION

TVs and monitors

Your old analog TV may still be useful even after the switch to digital. If you get your programming from cable or satellite, your programming provider will provide a signal the old TV can use for at least another three years. So you can move the old TV to a new location and keep using it at least until then.

Old computer monitors also can be used in an emergency. Truth is, if the old monitor is a good one, the only real drawback is size, weight and lack of widescreen. But some aren't worth keeping, and many recycling and disposal outlets accept monitors and TVs.

Computers

No use for the old computer? Consider giving it to a friend or family member, or donate it to a charity. Wipe your hard disk clean. Erasing files or even formatting the hard disk isn't enough to protect your old e-mails and financial information from prying eyes.

If your computer is headed for a recycler, remove the disk and keep it in a desk drawer instead of wiping the disk clean or destroying it with a hammer. It can serve as an emergency backup if something unfortunate should happen to the data on the new machine.

The Diet with a Degree of Difference a Medical Degree

he Center for Medical Weight Loss illnesses and prescription medication." is the first national network of physicians to bring trained medical expertise to the field of weight loss. Founded in 2002 by Dr. Michael S. Kaplan, a specialist in bariatric medicine, the center offers patients a long-term weight-loss approach managed with the full support of certified medical professionals.

According to Dr. Kaplan, "Treating people with weight problems isn't simply a matter of telling them to eat less and exercise more," he says. His research found that a central factor is addiction - to food - and an unhealthy pattern of eating. His primary approach, therefore, is to break food addictions and help patients reach a safe and healthy target weight quickly. Most importantly, the center's program teaches patients how to maintain their weight loss permanently.

"Unlike many consumer weight-loss programs whose staff requires no medical knowledge or training, The Center for Medical Weight Loss' physicians are certified professionals," notes Dr. Kaplan. "They fully understand the complex factors that are related to weight gain such as individual psychology and genetics, contributing

Dr. Kaplan's approach is based on individualized treatment. Whether patients are suffering from severe health issues due to excess weight or merely looking to lose 15 to 20 pounds, all receive a full medical consultation with scientific measurement of their body mass and basal metabolic rate and individual body composition analysis to accurately predict weight-loss results.

The center uses the latest techniques and medical data, and has access to highquality nutritional products and the newest FDA-approved weight-loss medications that are available only to medical doctors.

The average weight loss experienced by patients is 21 pounds in four weeks. In addition to the weight loss itself, health benefits include a decrease in dependence on blood pressure, diabetes and cholesterol medications, as well as lesser risk of chronic disease such as congestive heart failure, clinical depression and sleep apnea. Many successful patients refer to their experience at The Center for Medical Weight Loss as lifechanging, and in many cases, life-saving.

CASTING CALL

THESE CELEBS WOULD BE AWESOME FOR A FILM ABOUT OBAMA

Jamie Foxx already has conquered "The Kingdom." Is the White House next? The actor, who did an impersonation of Barack Obama at a kickoff concert in Washington, D.C., on Sunday, wouldn't commit to the idea of playing the incoming president when asked by Us Weekly magazine—but he didn't say no, either. "Oh, I don't know," Foxx told the mag. "He's going to do his own movie for the next four to eight years." Maybe he's just being modest. Foxx is one of many actors we can think of who would work well in an Obama biopic. Here's a look at how that casting call might line up.

RedEye's Twitter Obama movie

We asked RedEye's Twitter followers whom they would cast to play the man in the Oval Office in "Obama: The Movie." Here are some of the responses. Want to play a role in RedEye's social media push? Sign up at twitter.com/ redeyechicago.

@TheMikePhillips

Former Cub Felix Pie should play Obama. He has real-world experience as an uber-hyped Chicago prospect.

@Sloney

Denzel Washington. He was at the We Are One special, standing off to the side. So poised. So eloquent. SO Presidential.

@GrantGannon

I'll forgo the obvious choice of Will Smith and say ... Bobcat Goldthwait ... a true orator.

@Harry_Who Tracy Morgan.

Hilarious!

@Michellerussell

Dennis Haysbert, the president on "24," would make a GREAT Obama!

Sundance dispatches

Mariah Carey—who you'll remember (or not) starred in "Glitter"—is getting rave reviews for her performance in inner-city drama "Push," mtv.com reported. Hubby Nick Cannon's bloody thriller "The Killing Room" also was generating positive buzz.

And Ben Affleck turned up Saturday to talk about "Reporter," the feature-length documentary he produced. The film chronicles New York Times columnist Nicholas Kristof's journey to Congo to investigate the country's ongoing civil strife.

Opposites attract?

Paris Hilton has a show where girls clamor to be her BFF, but the celubutante says she'd love to befriend Angelina Jolie. She's quoted as saying to Fabulous Mag, according to excerpts on accesshollywood.com, that Angelina is "strong but gorgeous and uses her fame for good to make a big difference in the world. ... I'd have a lot in common with her."

Griffiths

Baby watch

"Brothers Sisters" star Rachel Griffiths is pregnant with her third child, accesshollywood. com reported. "I everybody was chattering at the Golden Globes about what I was hiding under that big gold tent," Griffiths joked. The actress revealed to People magazine that she's due in July. "I'm just relieved I don't have to suck my stomach in anymore."

Big-screen bound?

Did you hear there may be a movie version of now-canceled "Veronica Mars"? At a news conference for his upcoming series, "Cupid," "Veronica Mars" creator Rob Thomas revealed his next writing project is a movie based on the cult show, etonline.com reported. That got us thinking about what other TV shows should hit the big screen.

"Buffy the Vampire Slayer"

Yes we know the original "Buffy" was a movie. But it was cheesy. Do-over!

"The Sopranos"

We need closure! Did Tony die or what? Don't leave us hangin'.

"Heroes"

With its convoluted back to the future storylines, maybe a two-hour movie will keep fans interested-or hook in newbies who can't be bothered by plots that take forever to be resolved.

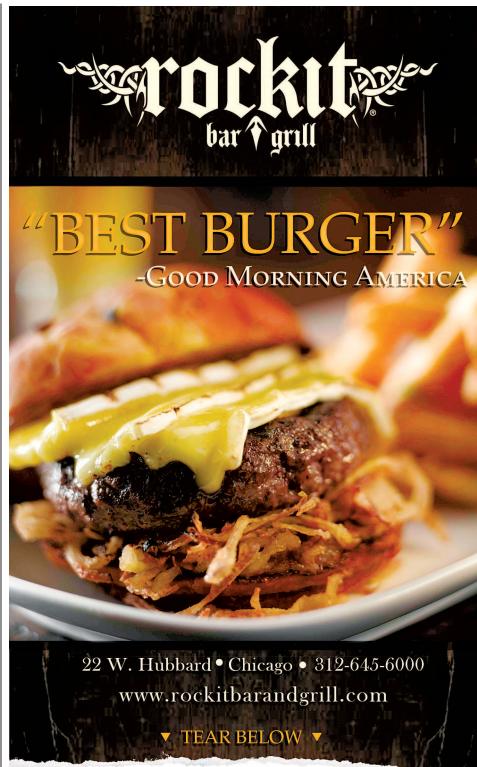

"Family Guy"

"The Simpsons" had their movie, even if it took years. Hopefully, there wouldn't be a half-hour scene of Peter singing "the bird is the word."

Are you excited about a "Veronica Mars" movie? Text "mars" and the number of your opinion to 47383. You'll get the poll results instantly. 2) Who cares? 1) Bring it on!

Another J-Hud appearance

A week after singing the national anthem at the Super Bowl, Jennifer Hudson will perform at the Grammy ceremony, where she's nominated four times, mtv.com reports. Hudson and another "American Idol" alum, Carrie Underwood, were added to the list of performers announced Monday for the awards show, which will air Feb. 8.

Cher gets her 'coug' on

Cher and Johnny Knoxville will star in a comedy about a 35-year-old career college student who is kicked out of his parents' house and turns to the cougar next door for comfort, according to The Hollywood Reporter. "The Drop-Out" is written and will be directed by Ricky Blitt, who also wrote the 2005 flick "The Ringer," which starred Knoxville.

Aww, slap!

Kelly Osbourne's slap-happy days are over. People.com reports that the 24-year-old daughter of Ozzy Osbourne has been arrested in London for allegedly slapping a journalist in a nightclub last summer. Osbourne was released on bail and is scheduled to return to see authorities in March.
